

Deox-Gel

Corrosion Removal

1) This medium to heavy rusted steel plate has been degreased with water based degreasing agent. (Try Marine Clean).

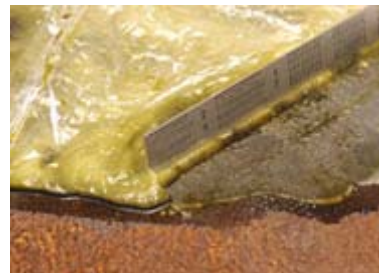

2) Deox-Gel is a thick paste designed to create a deep coating that de-rusts items too large to soak in a Deox-C bath.

3) Here a brush is used to smooth the Deox Gel across the rusted surface, the Gel must remain in a thick even layer; brushing out to a thin coat must be avoided. Spatulas, trowels or pressure pot spray can be used, for large areas.

4) The applied Deox-Gel is covered with plastic wrap to assist in the retention of moisture, this step is not essential, but it ensures that the gel remains soft indefinitely.

5) After 12 hours undisturbed the plastic film can be removed—the gel has darkened through corrosion absorption. A steel rule is used to push back the gel layer, demonstrating the effectiveness of Deox-Gel.

6) After a scrub with a stiff plastic bristled brush and plenty of water the treated area is clean and ready for protection.

Customer comments:-

Another interesting product I have found is a rust remover from Bilt Hamber Laboratories. I have been looking for something like this for years.....next day I brushed the gel off with water and the metal underneath was like it had been chromed. The rust had been cleared out of the heavy pit marks that a grinder could not have got to without grinding half the metal away. I must admit I was very sceptical, as I have paid good money out for rubbish before, so it was a very pleasing surprise."
